What's new in Codemakers!:

- The back story: When a person in the know – Mr Thomas Roell, a friend of the owner, who owned all the assets – heard the news about the Mevagissey, he told the chairman Daniel Champion three times: "I am in. Do I get a seat in the co-pilot seat?" CMC and his clique? As a quick reminder: CMC, as read by the British media is a French company (Code Meilleurs Consommateurs), who owns the Mevagissey. It is owned by the French company Quinze Mondes, which as written down here buys a CHF 7.6bn (EUR 8.4bn) from Thomas Cook. [Update:Theoretically the reason of the purchase of Thomas Cook by the CHF 7.6bn (EUR 8.4bn) buy is, to allow CMC to continue to exist after Thomas Cook finally collapses; it needed its own balance sheet. As Thomas Cook exists no more, CMC could simply get its own balance sheet (to keep it alive) and as the acquisition of the assets of Thomas Cook would be valid, CMC cannot be challenged (since it currently owns the assets of Thomas Cook). However, the judge in the liquidation (of Thomas Cook) did not allow it, since there was no margin call for the selling of the assets. What CMC had gained in the "long run" is the destruction of the hotel chain, which was sold off. However, since by then Thomas Cook had gone bankrupt and all assets had been sold off, it was an empty price to spend the CHF 7.6bn] Then came the revelation of Mr Thomas Roell who owns the assets, who wrote to the head of the company in Harenbach (Germany), Sir Iain Lobban or his designated person back in the UK to ask if he can come in to this back-stab party: "but I understand that you want Dan, Iain and the clique to takeover the company. And if that happens I will not be part of this company …" CMC may sell it himself Unfortunately this letter was written without the knowledge of the owner of CMC, which is Thomas Roell, who wants his assets back and he does not trust CMC. Roell is a very rich man, who was looking into building a hotel in the Bahamas and
