this is going to sound completely wrong to anyone other than MissSee. HRC just announced that they are donating to the campaign to get us a woman elected to the Supreme Court. I'm not telling you to vote for or against anyone. I don't care who is the next Supreme Court Justice. I'm not even sure who might be a good person for the job. But I do care that they be a woman. (And not one of the ones we already have.) I'm saying that the Republican Party needs to get on board with this. Why? Here's the problem. If Republicans don't endorse this in some fashion, then the next time the Democrats nominate a woman it could be a man. We're already seeing that in the media (the less-than-flattering coverage of Hillary Clinton) and on the campaign trail. To my fellow Republican women (and men) these are just words. But words have consequences and the consequences of this are dire. We will never have a Justice who can overturn Roe v. Wade because there won't be an opinion on Roe to have the Supreme Court hear. This can happen sooner than you think. This woman nominated by the Democrats will be a Supreme Court Justice (sans Roe). She will be in a position of power for a generation. The future of our country and our culture will be in her hands. If it is a man, that will be the case. The party will have a willing hand for decades to come. But if we don't allow this to happen, the future will be determined by a less than courteous partisan party. And it will hurt women for generations. And, while I'm sure there are some men who will feel good if a woman is a Supreme Court Justice, are they willing to support a woman who isn't so great on other issues? This isn't a partisan issue. It is an issue that will directly affect women and girls for generations if this doesn't happen. I have no idea who you are - but, the sexist guys I know, would rather a woman ran the FDA than a man because, they would not have to see a "woman in charge of the most important thing in their life" running all sorts of things at once. and I'm sure if you spoke to them, they'd say that they think their minds are far superior to a woman's mind, which is why they wouldn't

Every now and then, an author has a book come out, and for months afterwards everyone talks about it and debates who liked it and who didn't, and the book becomes increasingly metaphorical for all that happens in the world around us at the time. And then eventually that book falls into a gap. Today is the day that Invisible Monsters was published, and unfortunately, I can't remember when I read it. I was busy, and the time I did have to read it, I didn't take that much notice. In many ways, it was a book I should have read last summer. I have a few friends who have been diagnosed with cancer, and I should have been one of the first people to read it because I was one of the few people who knew what to say to them, and I should have said it out loud, and I didn't. It's hard to know that I missed my chance, and it's not like I didn't know. But in general, if you know you know, is that helpful? Besides, I was busy. The Brexit chaos continued. I feel embarrassed about how little I read this summer. But I feel angry, too. More angry that I don't feel I've learned anything from it. I keep hearing that the book is about bullying, and in a way that's true. But it's not just that. It's about prejudice, and it's about loneliness and about how it's impossible to be all-inclusive. But I have never spent much time with anyone who has had cancer, and even though we all remember those that have. It's about the isolation, even among those who have never been through it, and the isolation of the survivors of cancer, and the fact that cancer is not treated as a disability and a contagion, but it's a living thing and not to be taken too lightly. But I've spent so much time in pubs with strangers that I've taken for granted the idea that we're all capable of having conversations. And I know I'm not only talking about conversation where we swap factoids on football and movies – or rather I don't know if that's what I'm talking about – but human interaction.
