Tropico 4: The Academy is a standalone expansion to the award-winning Tropico 4 with new scenarios, an overhauled user interface, new in-game store, more maps, campaign mode and the “East Point Graduate” new perk. The present invention relates generally to magnetic stripe readers. More particularly, the present invention relates to encoder motors within magnetic stripe readers.

2. Related Art Magnetic stripe readers are used to read information from magnetic stripes in credit cards and debit cards. They are often provided with a disk drive used to store data from the magnetic stripe, a motor that is used to drive the disk drive during data transfer, and a signal processing device that communicates with the disk drive. The signal processing device receives encoded data from a magnetic stripe card and decodes it to recover the original information that was encoded. A typical motor encoder comprises an encoder shaft and an encoder wheel that is connected to the encoder shaft, and may be made up of a plurality of teeth with magnets attached to the teeth and arranged with the teeth in a circular pattern, where each tooth may be driven by a coil in the motor. Each tooth has a unique relative position to the rotational direction of the shaft, and that position is encoded and transmitted as a signal (e.g., a digital signal with two distinct levels corresponding to two distinct angular positions of a tooth) to the signal processing device. Encoder wheels may be made from a variety of materials, such as aluminum or plastic. Generally, a plastic encoder wheel is desirable because of its lower cost and lower weight, but plastic encoder wheels are less than desirable because of an overall increase in mass-induced inaccuracies that the magnetic stripe reader must contend with, for example, inaccuracies which are due to mass of the magnetic stripe reader itself. Accordingly, it would be an advancement in the art to provide an encoder wheel for a magnetic stripe reader that overcomes the above-described shortcomings of the prior art. These and other objects and advantages of the present invention will be better understood from the following detailed description of the preferred embodiment of the invention. ome interlude The kittens are supposedly asleep. Just enough kibbles and bits to keep them from starving, and no mother to keep them up if they wake up. It's 11 at night, practically midnight already, and I'm staring at an inch and a half-wide window that looks out over the kitchen's back terrace. I know that if I were to leave the window right now, the kittens would probably be fast asleep in an hour-or-two's time. I can't stand it any longer. I have to go out there. I turn on the light and carefully step over the edge, into darkness. My legs have to believe they are on solid ground for a moment, as I carefully put them down in the cold grass, feeling their vibrations. They creak, creak, creak. The grass in the dark is the same temperature as the wet grass in the yard. I very carefully shut the door behind me. Too little light coming in to see, I could get a few steps down the path — but I'd be visible to anybody who looked out the window. The moon is still high and reflecting off the birds on the lawn. I'm scared for these babies. I carefully move off the path and creep toward where the most light hits the grass. It has to be exactly 1.8 m away from the house. I carefully crouch down and feel each part of the grass. I feel the top surface, where it's been mowed. And I feel the slightly damp spaces under the mow. A better-lawn mower does this every couple days or so to remove the crusts that keep the grass from growing properly. It's been there a week or so, and the tips of the grass — the shadows — feel almost all hardy and tough. Kittens under my ass. My pants bunch up and they slip, bunch up and slip...Ssh! I had hoped that the grass under the mower would be a little softer, as if the mowers are right in between cutting. Both the mowers and the lawn cutter in this neighborhood are huge, and they have it set on 6, which is the right setting for lawn. Anyway, it needs to be adjusted for where it is to cut grass, as well as where it is to mow it. That morning, I had adjusted the lawn m
