Most Missourians I have met seem to be very nice and are very welcoming to outsiders. (They don't seem to appreciate Tampa, though.) That being said, I don't know if it is true or false, but it seems like most people from Missouri like to boast about all their best foods; not the fact that, for the most part, the food tastes like animal piss mixed with chemicals (am I the only one who thinks that?). Seems like it's the same across the USA. I am speaking from experience. (I'm from Tennessee) I had never heard of "D'Brickshaw Beach" before visiting Tampa. Not even a restaurant reference. I'm assuming it's a place and a street by that name. In any case, you didn't mention much of what other cities were offering in the area. "Bucharest, the medieval city located in the Bukovina region of Eastern Romania" (from Wikipedia). If it was an authentic experience, they'd have to present some authentic food. This is a frequent observation for my friends and I. When we travel to other cities, we are almost always shocked by the quality of the local food. Yep, I was just on the Romanian Holiday, we visited this place called "Bucurest" but it was not spelt like you said, we were there in september but it will be interesting to see where we go and what we
